the launch of oneacre.online oneacre.online would like to announce a year of attempting to publish and distribute unprintable works.

By drawing inspiration from the first line of Anthony Antonellis' Internet Art in a Gallery: "Don't copy paste internet art into a gallery. Make a holodeck." In reserve; and on a different topic; oneacre.online launches with an attempt to feel out its ambiguous online terrain and determine how much of a space an acre online actually is.

oneacre.online will move forward into being a space for unprintable text-based works, with a focus on showcasing writing of emerging and upcoming artists based in The Hague, The Netherlands. It will host four works throughout 2017-2018 in a three months cycle, with the first one being released in December 2017.

Programme updates, information and news will be announced through the website soon or you could sign up for our newsletter to have links arrive in your mailbox.

oneacre.online is an experimental publication and distribution project, of size exactly equal to the area of 1 chain by 1 furlong that aims to utilise this online space to seed unprintable works.

Made by Victoria Douka-Doukopoulou, Stef Kors and Titus Knegt with the kind support of the Creative Industries Fund NL.
